LIBRO: A LA DERIVA POR INTENCIÓN. CUATRO TRADICIONES EPISTÉMICAS DESDE LA INVESTIGACIÓN DEL DISEÑO CONSTRUCTIVO.

RESUMEN

El libro "Drifting by Intention. Four Epistemic Traditions from within Constructive Design Research" de los autores Peter Gall Krogh (Aarhus University, Denmark) y Ilpo Koskinen (University of New South Wales, Australia) puede ser de interés de la comunidad universitaria y de los lectores de A3manos en general. El libro está sujeto a derecho de autor y derechos de la editorial por lo que sólo compartimos el índice de contenidos y los datos de contacto de los autores.

ABSTRACT

The book "Drifting by Intention. Four Epistemic Traditions from within Constructive Design Research" by authors Peter Gall Krogh (Aarhus University, Denmark) and Ilpo Koskinen (University of New South Wales, Australia) may be of interest to the university community and readers of A3manos in general. The book is subject to copyright and publisher rights, so we only share the table of contents and the contact information of the authors.

Contents

1. Drifting	1
1.1 Drifting in Profession and Research	4	5.3.2 Accumulative — An Example	68
1.2 Constructive Design Research	5	5.4 What the Typology of Drifting Methods Reveals	69
1.3 Drifting in Design and in Constructive Design Research	7	6. Four Epistemic Traditions of Evaluation	73
1.4 New Experimentalism as a Lens	9	6.1 Evaluation in the Experiential Tradition	74
1.5 Explicating Drifting	10	6.2 Evaluation in Methodic Tradition	76
1.6 On Terminology and the Structure of the Book	12	6.3 Evaluation in Programmatic Tradition	77
2. Shift to Knowledge	15	6.4 Evaluation in Dialectic Tradition	78
2.1 Knowledge as Method and as Aesthetic	16	6.5 Accountability as Drifting Heuristic	80
2.2 Artifacts as Knowledge	18	7. Crossing the Hermeneutic Gap	83
2.3 Frameworks and Programs: Discourse as Knowledge	21	7.1 Crossing the Hermeneutic Gap	84
2.4 Knowledge as Participation: How Users Motivate Drifting	22	7.1.1 Experiential: The Hermeneutic Gap as Creative Space	85
2.5 What to Expect From Constructive Design Research: Re-Articulation	25	7.1.2 Methodic: Making the Gap Transparent	87
2.6 Sum Up	27	7.1.3 Programmatic Tradition and the Hermeneutic Gap	89
3. Drifting in Four Epistemic Traditions	29	7.2 From Research to Concept	92
3.1 Experiential Tradition and Drifting	30	8. New Experimentalism	95
3.2 Methodic Tradition and Drifting	34	8.1 How Knowledge Depends on Experience	96
3.3 Programmatic Tradition and Drifting	36	8.2 Against Method: Methods as Achievements	98
3.4 Dialectic Tradition and Drifting	40	8.3 Design is Stubborn	99
3.5 Drifting, Accountability, and Context: The Art of Being Robust	44	8.4 Discourse is Equally Stubborn	100
4. Design Hypothesis: Knowledge-Relevance Model	47	8.5 Design Practice, Programs and Discourse in Empathic Design	101
4.1 Mapping Design Practice in Relation to Knowledge	48	8.6 Experimentation as a Site of Intentional Drifting	104
4.2 The Knowledge-Relevance (K-R) Model	50	9. At the Frontiers of Knowledge	107
4.3 Design Hypothesis in the Four Epistemic Traditions	53	9.1 Knowledge-Relevance: Talking to Two Audiences	108
4.3.1 Hypothesis in the Experiential Tradition	53	9.2 Epistemic Traditions in Their Full Depth	108
4.3.2 Hypothesis in Methodic Epistemic Tradition	54	9.3 Drifting in Conceptual Scaffoldings	110
4.3.3 Hypotheses in Programmatic Epistemic Tradition	55	9.4 New Experimentalism	112
4.3.4 Hypothesis Emerging in Dialectic	56	9.5 Towards Technical Humanism	114
4.4 Hypothesis in the Knowledge-Relevance Model	57	9.6 The Limits of Eurocentricism	116
5. Ways of Drifting in Design Experiments	59	9.7 Constructive Design Research Beyond Europe	118
5.1 Drifting in Constructive Design Research	60	9.8 The Future of Design as a Knowledge-Based Discipline	119
5.2 Drifting Through Design Experiments: Five Methods	61	10. Corpus	123
5.2.1 Accumulative	62	10.1 Primary Corpus	125
5.2.2 Comparative	63	10.2 Expanded Corpus	126
5.2.3 Expansive	64	Literature	129
5.2.4 Serial	65	Index	139
5.2.5 Probing	65
5.3 How the Methods Work Over a Design Process	67
5.3.1 Comparative — An Example	67
